

Vinyl Music Store Opens in Marshfield Wisconsin

By: Paige Kupstis

Danielle Anderson has brought vinyl back to Marshfield, Wisconsin. According to her statement on the news she is surprised about how many young people are interested in listening to music on vinyl. She grew up around music. Anderson's grandma owned an instrument store. She is thrilled that her store is succeeding and providing a piece of history into the city of Marshfield.

Anderson has got a lot of her current vinyls from old collections. Although with the classics, she also has some newer music as well. "Along with the classics, Good Day Sunshine will also carry newer artists and new pressings of the classics." She is also hoping with time she can feature turntables, and art in her store. Walking in her store will truly be like walking into the past.

It is a completely different experience, going to a vinyl store is a lot more fun and intriguing, than just listening to music digitally. Anderson hopes that this store will open up the doors to bringing back the experience of corresponding over the same interests. Meeting new people is especially hard in today's world. Sharing something in common, even something as small as the same music taste can bring two people together. Danielle Anderson is doing her best to bring her society back together, hopefully you will find the time to go visit her store, "Good Day Sunshine", and hopefully meet some really great people!
